

THE MAKEOVER OF GEORGE W. BUSH;
BUT BEWARE THE IDES OF MARCH !

For a Texan, who did not know, or appreciate, the difference between the country, South Africa, and the Continent of Africa, Mr George W. Bush has graduated from being just a Texan into an international statesman – who is, quite likely, to be re-elected, for a second term, to the Presidency of the United States of America (US) at next year's elections.

It would be fair to state that his handlers have made him over into a seemingly benevolent and very caring international statesman, who values loyalty, life, the natural rights of man, God, the sacred contract of marriage, liberty, the pursuit of happiness, etc, etc, etc.

His secret trip to Iraq on November 27, 2003 – it could be held that he was putting his life, and many others, at risk by embarking on this trip – was, on close examination, a masterful piece of propaganda, guaranteed to win the hearts of his 140,000-odd fighting men in that theatre of war, and, of course, it was calculated to win millions of votes at the 2004 Presidential Elections.

Hugging the 'ordinary' soldier, not the officer, mind you, but the rank-and-file, the men and women in the trenches, so to speak, gave him the appearance of being one with them.

It was a beautiful touch, which came through, very naturally on camera: One could, almost, feel the President's sincerity, as he posed for photographs with 'his' men and women of the US Army.

Naturally, he wore the common, battle-dress jacket of the US Army, with his name, George W. Bush, prominently displayed above the pocket on his right breast: A down-to-earth touch, rehearsed, very daintily.

'Gosh! That's our leader! God damned! That there is George W. Bush, our Commander-in-Chief!' one could almost hear the 600 or so American soldiers, saying at the commencement of that memorable Thanksgiving Day luncheon on November 27, as the President was introduced to his men.

After a short speech, the applause was deafening: The President was seen with a tear in his eye.

Exquisite!

And, when President George W. Bush stood in the chow line, serving up the food to the ordinary rank-and-file soldier, which female soldier, present at that function, could not help but blush, with a little tear in her eye, at this giant of a man, who had spent his Thanksgiving Day with his fighting men and women, sacrificing the safety of the White House or his ranch in Crawford, Texas?

Of course, the cameras were grinding away in order to record the history making event.

But, then again, everything that a President of the world's only superpower does is recorded, in any event – and a little bit more, such as President George W. Bush's secret trip to Baghdad on a Thanksgiving Day could hardly hurt a Presidential Election Campaign.

That trip, probably, will be remembered as being a stroke of genius.

It is a pity, really, that it was not President George W. Bush, who came up with the idea, because reports have it that it was proposed to him, back in July, this year.
