

The Betty Letters

My Dear Grandchild,

I recall that, when I was in school, it was mandatory that we studied literature for at least one semester. I took English Literature and, of course, ended up studying William Shakespeare's works. I recall one famous line from the play, Julius Caesar: 'The evil that men do lives after them; the good is oft interred in their bones.' That may have been the case in the Seventeenth Century, but it appears not always to be the case, today. Take former President Bill Clinton, for instance. Now, here was a known fornicator, an accomplished perjurer, a cur of the worst sort, and the second US President to be impeached by the House of Representatives. It was proved that he took advantage of his privileged position in order to satisfy his personal lusts – at the expense of his duty of fidelity to the very people who voted him into office. During the time that he committed his many malfeasances, he was the elected leader of the most-powerful country that the world has ever known. Which indicates one of the many drawbacks to the democratic system of government as it is practised in most parts of the West. Today, he is sought out by certain groups of people and very reputable organisations, all anxious for him be present at certain functions in order to lend credibility to this or that campaign. I suppose you know that his home state of Arkansas has struck him off the roll of those people, licensed to practise law in that State. In June 2000, The Arkansas Supreme Court Committee on Professional Conduct charged President Bill Clinton with misstatements in the Paula Jones sexual harassment case and determined that he was unfit to be a lawyer. The charges stemmed from a 1998 deposition, in which President Bill Clinton denied having a sexual relationship with White House Intern Monica Lewinsky, but, eight months later, President Bill Clinton admitted to the relationship. The judge in the Paula Jones Case found President Bill Clinton in Contempt of Court and fined him $US90,000. It was that same judge, who referred this matter to the Arkansas Supreme Court, thus starting the disbarment proceedings. Arkansas, it appears, does not cotton on to perjurers, unlike some people, it is obvious. The latest piece of notoriety for President Bill Clinton is that he has a condom, named after him. Which, to my way of thinking, is most appropriate. According to Guangzhou Hao Jian Biotech Company Ltd, it has designed a pair of condoms, one called 'Clinton' and one called 'Lewinsky'. At the time that President Bill Clinton was fornicating with this former comely lady (she is very fat, today), it was said that he placed his cigar in her – you know where – in order to enhance its flavour. To be fair to this former leader of the world's most-powerful nation, it has never been proved that his penis entered her vagina – and that was his only defence, during the investigation into the matter. Also, I note that there is no evidence of any Clinton spermatozoa, entering the birth canal of Monica Lewinsky. But, clearly, there must have been at least a drip of so of Clinton sperm, finding its way from the vulva to the cervix of this once, attractive lady of the White House. Anyway, be that as it may, according to Mr Liu Wen Hua, General Manager of Guangzhou Hao Jian Biotech Company Ltd, his company has registered the condom brands in the People's Republic of China. The condoms are for the use of males, only, with the Clinton brand, being the up-market brand, while the Lewinsky brand is for the down-market brand. This makes perfect sense, considering the history of this pair of former lovers, don't you think? The cost of a dozen Clinton condoms is $US3.70, while the cost for a dozen Lewinsky condoms is $US2.30. This, too, makes perfect sense because, after all, Bill Clinton is worth at least sixty one percent more than Monica Lewinsky. Isn't that correct? The international outrage of these matters is, just about, buried in the United States, today, but, in the People's Republic of China, it appears that at least one enterprising manufacturer of condoms is resurrecting the matter in order (a) to make some money (b) to control the spread of venereal diseases in the country, and, of course, (c) to control unwanted births in the country. The idea of controlling the spread of venereal diseases in the country is, probably, the most-important aspect in the manufacture of the Clinton condoms: When a man wears the Clinton condom, he can cast his mind back to the reason that the condom bears the name of a President of the United States. President Bill Clinton is known for his present work in trying to control the spread of AIDS (Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome), internationally, so that he should not complain about the fact that he has a condom, named in his (dis?)honour. When sexually active males of the People's Republic of China buy a packet of up-market Clinton condoms or down-market Lewinsky condoms, they can ponder the history of this famous illicit affair and consider the potential results of any covert acts. Who knows, it may even excite some males more than normal. Come to think of it, I wonder whether or not President Bill Clinton still smokes cigars? Perhaps, there will be somebody in Cuba, who will name a cigar after President Bill Clinton, a cigar with one end, being slightly tapered so that it fits better than the Churchill Cigar, which is very fat and long. I have no knowledge of the dimensions of the appendage of President Bill Clinton, but I think that he could not fit in very well with legacy of Prime Minister Winston Churchill, who was never proved to be a fornicator, a perjurer or a cur.

Talk to you next week.
